Eighth News from San Francisco. (5 p.m., Monday, May 31st.)

The Pacific and the Southern Pacific Railroads are now running a train daily between San Francisco and Los Angeles, and a number of additional trains have been ordered to be added. The fare from San Francisco to Los Angeles is $2.50, and the journey takes about 15 hours.

The California Southern Railroad has been granted a charter by the State Legislature, and work on the line is to begin immediately. The railroad will extend from San Francisco to the coast, and will be completed within two years. The cost of the line is estimated at $5,000,000.

The San Francisco Daily Bee has been sold to a new owner, who promises to make it a more popular paper. The new owner is a well-known newspaper publisher from Los Angeles, and he intends to make the Bee a leading paper in the West.

The San Francisco Fire Department has received a new steam engine, which is the most powerful in the city. The engine is capable of pumping 50,000 gallons of water per hour, and is equipped with the latest machinery. The engine was built by the firm of Brown and Company, and cost $25,000.

The San Francisco Police Department has received a new horse, which is the most magnificent in the city. The horse is a stallion, and is valued at $1,500. It was presented to the police department by a wealthy citizen of San Francisco.

The San Francisco Merchants' Association has announced that the San Francisco fair will open on June 1st, and will continue for six weeks. The fair will be held in the old Fair Grounds, and will be the largest and most important fair in the West. The fair will include exhibits of all kinds, as well as a grand concourse of horse racing.

The San Francisco Stock Exchange has for the first time exceeded the value of the New York Stock Exchange. The value of the San Francisco Stock Exchange is now $100,000,000, while the value of the New York Stock Exchange is $75,000,000.

The San Francisco Daily Bee has for the first time printed a comic strip, which is sure to be a great success. The comic strip is called "The Life of King William," and is drawn by a well-known artist. The comic strip will be published daily, and will be sold for a penny.

The San Francisco Daily Bee has for the first time published a poem, which is sure to be a great success. The poem is called "The Ballad of the Golden Gate," and is written by a well-known poet. The poem will be published daily, and will be sold for a penny.