I have been selected by the citizens of Cincinnati o discharge the pleasing duty of bidding you, in beir name, a heartfelt honorable welcome; and o make known to you the feelings of respect and dmiration which they cherish for a man who has o fearlessly done his whole duty in the councils of he nation. I discharge this trust the more wil-ngly from the fact that it is reposed by no party, s urged by no sect or division, no political cabal, out it is a free will offering from the hearts of those whose respect you have won, as the representative of the honest sentiment of the whole country, and whose course has been governed alone by his devo-tion to the Constitution and the Union. [Ap-plause.] In performing, therefore, a pleasing hause. In performing, therefore, a pleasing duty, I esteem it a privilege to address you a few words of welcome from the citizens of Cincinnati. They regard you as one who looks upon the poli-iles of the country in no sectional light, but as belonging to the whole Republic—that should be ike operative everywhere—as a statesman who n look upon each section of the Union as worthy like can look upon each section of the Chion as workby of his care and protection, and every part of the common country as his home. I am the last man in the world who would be charged with a dispo-sition to flatter; I am more disposed to be censo-rious even to personal and political friends; but I am glad to assure you that in the throng which surrounds you there are men of all parties who rejoice in this opportunity to do you honor. In the afternoon a large number of our citizens paid their respects to Mr. and Mrs. Crittenden in the parlor of the Spencer House. Among others who called was Governor Chase. The Covington Committee of Reception, Dr. C. J. Blackburn, Dr. A. Evans, and W. Talbott, and J. W. Menzies, formally invited Mr. Crittenden to the hospitalities of Covington.

him across the river. As the boat swung round from the wharf on the Cincinnati side, loaded with enthusiastic admirers of Senator Crittenden, a national salute was fired from the opposite bank of the river, at both New-port and Covington. As the procession from those cities had not yet reached the wharf, the steamer run a short distance up and down the river, while a salute of heavy artillery was kept up from both cities cities. When the torchlight procession finally arrived, about eight o'clock, Mr. Crittenden was handed over to the Covington Reception Committee, amid the booming of cannon and the enthusiastic shouts of thousands of people, the waving of handker-chiefs by hundreds of ladies, and the flashing of torches and transprancing. A four horse open chiefs by hundreds of ladies, and the histing of torches and transparencies. A four-horse, open carriage, decked with flags, was waiting his ar-rival, which, with a band of music, headed the procession, followed by other carriages, and a large number on foot. Various banners were dis-played, expressive of a hearty welcome, and of the leading traits in Mr. Crittenden's life and char-acter. acter

As the procession entered the grounds, marshaled by S. K. Hays and the Committee of Re-ception, on horseback, the thousands present sent up a shout of welcome that could not, as to its sinup a shout of welcome that could not, as to its sin-cerity, be mistaken. Men whose hearts did not willingly respond to the patriotic course of the distinguished Senator who was the recipient of the honors of the occasion, could not have waked the distant hills with their voices as did the Ken-tuckians in welcoming their faithful Representa-tive; and, as he ascended the stand crected for the occasion, there are a scene of turnultures an occasion, there was a scene of tumultuous ap-plause, and waving of banners and handkerchiefs, that gave good assurance that he was indeed wel-come to his "Old Kentucky Home."

JUDGE KINCAID'S WELCOME.

Dr. BLACKBURN, Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements, came forward and requested the multitude to be silent, when W. B. KINCAID addressed Mr. Crittenden as follows :

have enjoyed uniterruptedly the confidence and the affection of the people of Kentucky. You have been, I can truly say, her favorite son. Born ror these reasons, for the pure love of the Union, and the unselfish patriotism which you have ever displayed in your public career, and especially in your course in the Senate within the past three months, the people have assembled to do you honor, not as a politician, but because they love the man—JOHN J. have been welcomed with a warmth of leening that I was little prepared to anticipate, and which has excited feelings of the liveliest gratitude. A VOICE-Remember Henry Clay! Mr. CRITENDEN-I do remember him! His was a name that can never be forgotten, that will grow fresher in memory with every day that passes over his grave! It was born in me to be a Kentuckian, and so I am and intend to be! I intend to pass the little remeant of my life in deserving the apfree institutions rest. As a Kentucky Senator, who felt that Kentucky never expected or desired the perpetration of a wrong or an outrage upon popular rights through her agents, he had refused to give his sanction to the fraud, and was ready to defend himself at all times against all attacks upon his course. He had lived too long in Kentucky and had studied too well Kentucky character to do an act in his reprethe little remnant of my life in deserving the approbation of my fellow-citizens. It has been my aim to serve my countrymen first, and then to please them. But I would much rather serve than please them. An eventful session of Congress has just closed. Its labors are all over, and the results are with the people. All rumors of war have passed away. Our national honor has been satisfied, and no danger exists of hostile collision with nations abroad. A spirit of unanimity rises up from the land everywhere, and brings peace to our borders. Party strife has, in some degree, passed away. With an Administration party on one side, and a united Opposition on the other and, I think, if you will give me leave to say it, the little remnant of my life in deserving the ap-probation of my fellow-citizens. It has been my aim to serve my countrymen first, and then to please them. But I would much rather serve than and, I think, if you will give me leave to say it, there will not be much of a contest. A VOICE-Not more than two years! Mr. CRITTENDEN-The Administration of Adams was bitterly assailed for extravagance, and yet in four years the total amount expended was fifty-four millions of dollars, for maintaining the Army and all. Last year the present Administration synoptical view of this admirable address; we confess ourselves utterly incompetent to the task. The mere words of the speech might have been reported; but the manner could not be even re-motely conveyed. We close, therefore, this im-perfect sketch of this splendid ovation, by saying again that it was alike worthy of the graceful ora-tor, the chivalic statesman and the true-hearted tor, the chivalric statesman and the true-hearted Kentuckian in whose honor it was conceived, and Kentuckian in whose honor it was conceived, and of the generous, manly and noble people who par-ticipated in it. The occasion will long hold an abiding place in the memory of all who witnessed it. It was a spontaneous tribute of affection and gratitude by an intelligent and manly people to a man who is without power and patronage to com-mand applause, and of which the distinguished Senator has just cause to feel, and we have reason o know does feel, justly proud. Mr. Crittenden, with his escort from Cincinnati and Covington, and a large committee from Frankand all. Last year, the present Administration expended over eighty millions of dollars. The people cried out "extravagance" against Gen. Jackson, and yet but one hundred millions of dol-lars was expended in his first four years. The present Administration will swallow up that sum during the present year! It is ny duty to call

VOICES—NO: NO: NO: Mr. CRITTENDEX—Would you have all the nation-ality of a freeman's heart, all the manhood in his existence worked down into an animal? If you would have manufactures and the mechanic arts prosper in your own midst, put your taxes upon to reign goods so as to afford a reasonable protec-tion to labor in your own country. Should we tion to labor in your own country. Should we pursue foreigners with the same pains and afflic-tions from which they have once escaped? Let us protect our own countrymen first! [Applause.] But you, my friends, have given me a welcome from warm hearts, for which I thank you. It is a tribute from Old Kentucky that I would not give for all the revenue that was ever collected by a tariff. It has filled the measure of gratitude to overflowing. I care not for the smiles or frowns of the President. I shall not seek to make him smile and do not mind his frowns. I can frown back again. Your welcome is enough! You have filled my heart with gratitude. Kentucky has ever been a mother to me, and her sons my broth-ers and friends.

Shouts and cheers followed the speech of Mr. Crittenden, and at its conclusion hundreds crowded about the stand to take him by the heartfelt.

Direct taxation must be the inevitable result of this ex-travagance. If the people from Kentucky consti-tute one-twentieth of the population of the United States, your proportion of the National Debt would be about four millions. But would you like to pay even half that sum by direct taxes upon your lands and chattels to support an ex-travagant and wasteril Administration! There are members of Congress who advocate direct taxation. They advocate "equality;" but it would be an equality that would bring the labor-ing man down to the standard of Europe. Are such the kind of men to rule this mighty domin-ion of ours? Mr. Crittenden took his friends at Frankfort somewhat by surprise, having arrived there in the morning of the 22d of June, instead of the afternoon, as had been arranged. They were determined, however, to give him a cheering reception; and in the evening, with a band of music, marched to his residence, and escorted him to the State House, where a large crowd had assembled, and where he was welcomed in a handsome speech by Goy. Morehead. To this, Mr. Crittenden replied in his usual foreible and eloquent manner, declaring that in his late course he had followed the path of honor and probity, as he had been taught to do by his Kentucky constituents. Thus ends, for the present, a series of ovations to the honored and veteran statesman. RACES AT SAN JUAN .- The Star, of July 81st,

Mr. CRITTENDEN, who had remained standing n the carriage, responded to the welcome with which he had been greeted as follows:

I was wholly unprepared for such a reception, and am almost ashamed to re-ceive it, feeling as I do that I have done so little to deserve the honors which you have so liberally showered upon me. From the fullness of my heart I thank you; and if I show but little grace under so unexpected a welcome you must attribute it to the proper cause. I thank you for your gen-erous appreciation of the feeble efforts which I have been enabled to put forth in signalizing my devotion to the Union of the States. When I was for the sixth time honored by the people of Ken-tucky, I reflected that I had run the heated race of politics, had battled the storm and loved the strife, politics, had battled the storm and loved the strife, until a period in life when there was less excuse for party enthusiasm, and I resolved to pursue a different course-to be less of a party man-to serve my country better than I had done in the past. The whole Union is none too large to be compre-hended within the patriotic affections and great hopes of any man, and I feel that wherever I stand I can stamp my foot and say, "This is my country, my native land, and these my fellow citi-zens!" [Loud cheering.] These are the senti-ments of my heart, and is it strange that I should act upon such promptings? I claim no special merit for my public acts. I have done no more than my duty-done it as an honest man. [Ap-plause.] In my public service I have endeavored to be faithful to the Constitution, rather than to party, serving my country to the best of my abili-ties.

I address no party, but speak alike to all, to do their duty faithfully, and leave the results to God! I look for no political distinction in the future; my acts are for the present; I leave to speculators and tricksters the temporary success which awards political dishonesty. All trickery and knavery amount to nothing. It is like burnt grass that turns to ashes. We should encourage American industry and American labor, and by that means depend more upon ourselves. the soil of your native State, old Kentucky, but that man is always at home who is surrounded by love, affection, and esteem; and I assure you, sir, that if it be home where friends are, you are as much at home here as upon the other side of the Ohio. And when you leave us, you will carry with you earnest prayers for the long continuance of a life that has thus far been spent in the service of the whole country, and made honorable by acts of patriotism, to which my feeble praise can add no additional renown. Again, in behalf of the citi-zens of Cincinnati, I bid you welcome to their homes and hearts. f gress, and the distinguished part you bore in them, have not failed to stir and animate the hearts of your friends, and, I may add, of all who love what is true and manly, to a warmer admiration. The issue before Congress on the Lecompton Constitution of Kansas was one of fearful import.
The vast power of the Executive was combined with the power of that party whose members are cemented by ties stronger than those which united any other party, each desperately bent on the accomplishment of a great wrong.
Southern prejudices were appealed to; threats were uttered against all Southerners who should dare to oppose their purpose; the loss of friends and utter ruin at home to all who should have the maliness to think and act for themselves. The old cry of "Abolitionism" had been invoked to the ruin of better men and truer men to the South than any who raised it. This was again to be invoked to your destruction if you dared to be found taking such a position that the Republicans should act with you.
At that most interesting moment the eyes of the part whose interest and you.

nation turned toward you. On your decision hung suspended momentous interests. You did not quail. Those threats did not alarm you. You right.

Our Kentucky hearts now swell with pride and Our Kentucky hearts now swell with pride and exultation as we recur to that day when, standing before that august body, you plead the cause of justice and popular rights against fearful odds, combined and bent on perpetrating a fearful wrong. No petty selfshness, no personal ambition, no partisan bitterness, no sectional views were then seen. High and noble sentiments, uttered from a beart true to particitism and bonor ruled that heart true to patriotism and honor, ruled that hour. The nation heard with rapture, and through-out this broad and blessed land there went up one long, loud peal of acclamation and gratitude for what you that day accomplished. Your triumph was most glorious. That you should then be denounced by those whom you had opposed was to have been ex-pected. But be of good cheer; the wise and the good will not fail to appreciate and reward with good will not fail to appreciate and reward with their approbation virtuous and patrictic actions. Their blessings and benedictions will be poured upon your head. As the organ of this vast assem-blage, I now stand here to tender to you their gratitude for such services, and to give you again a hearty welcome to your own Kentucky. When Mr. CRITTENDEN came forward he was greeted by prolonged cheers. He was much moved by the flattering language in which he had been addressed, and manifested unmistaken emotion. The quivering lip and moistened eye touched by the earnest devotion of his friends. He responded with much feeling :

RECEPTION AT LEXINGTON.

At Lexington, Mr. Crittenden appears to have been received with even a greater degree of enthusiasm than that which greeted him at Cincinnati and Covington. The Observer, of the 23d, thus describes the incidents of the even-

The reception of Gov. Crittenden in this city, on Monday evening last, was one of the grandest on Monday evening last, was one of the grandest displays of popular approbation ever witnessed here. It was a spontaneous tribute of affection and gratitude on the part of the people to an old, long tried and faithful public servant; and the en-thusiasm manifested on the occasion reminded us forcibly of that which burst forth, on various oc-casions, on the return of the venerated Sage of Ashland to his home after periods of long and natriotic devotion to his country in the Councils patriotic devotion to his country in the Councils of the Nation. No one could witness the pageant on Monday evening without feeling conscious that the distinguished statesman in whose honor it was gotten up has a hold upon the popular heart that nothing but a long life of patriotic service to the country could command. The whole affair was an ovation worthy of the gallant statesman him self, and of the noble people who participated

Governor Crittenden, accompanied by a large committee of gentlemen from Cincinati, and a still more numerous one from Covington, arrived every year, come forward, and set an example in the evening train from the latter place at fifteen minutes after seven o'clock. His approach to the city was announced by the firing of cannor; and upon his arrival at the depot, he was greeted with the long and hearty shouts of his assembled friends and admirers. The committee appointed to re-ceive him entered the cars as soon as they arrived, and tendered him the hospitalities of the city, which were gracefully accepted by him in a few appropriate and feeling remarks. A procession was then formed, under the direc-tion of Dr. E. L. Dudley as Chief Marshal, and he was escorted to Odd Fellows' Hall, where a bril-liant and imposing spectacle was presented. That large and elegant building, the most capacious by far in the city, was literally packed with people, a in the evening train from the latter place at fifteen the various precincts to call primary meetings on Thursday, August 5th, 1858, for the purpose be holden in Weaverville, on Saturday, August 7th, to nominate candidates to fill the various

After the performance of a national air by Men-ter's celebrated band, which accompanied the hon-ored guest and his escort from Cincinnati, George Robertson rose, and in a chaste, well considered and well delivered address, in which he took oc-casion to refer to Mr. Crittenden's long public ser-vices in the councils of the nation as a Senator from Kentucky, and to his recent signal and truly republican course in Congress in favor of the great principle upon which all our institutions great principle upon which all our institutions rest-popular sovereignty-welcomed him to our city and its hospitalities. The address of Judge Robertson elicited repeated evidences of approba-tion during its delivery, and when he closed by presenting to the multitude the distinguished Sen-ator, the very walls were made to echo with pro-longed and enthusiastic cheering. Mr. Crittenden was evidently deeply affected by the heartfelt and cordial reception extended to im by the people of Lexington and county of Fayette, and his voice, when he commenced his address, gave unmistakable indication of the working of his great soul. I would not attempt to cover up the fraud by a little circumlocution, but would rather take the danger of the perils through the wilderness, and meet the approval of my friends, than silently concur in an act of wroup friends. I did so, and my highest ambition has been gratified. These were the emotions and feelings which prompted me, so help me God! I did not intend to make a political speech upon this occasion.
