E. Van Muller offered a resolution that a Commitee of citizens be appointed to investigate the railroad matters from the beginning, and take railroad matters from the beginning, and take such steps as are necessary to prevent the renewal, by the Legislature, of any contract of the Marysville and San Francisco railroad, and further, to use all proper means to have the bonds already issued—illegally, perhaps—returned to the county.

Adkinson stated, on the authority of Haskin, contractor for the read that the residual states.

Addinson stated, on the authority of Haskin, contractor for the road, that the railroad company did not propose to call for any more bonds until the track is laid, but are willing and desirous that a Committee of investigation be appointed to look into the affairs of the road, and that they ask only the good will of the county, and are ready to secure the county against any possibility of any further bonds being asked for at present we suppose was meant, though not

Judge Filkins thought that Van Muller's motion went too far, for no contract existed be-tween the county and the railroad company which could be annulled, but that the only relawhich could be annulled, but that the only relation between the two was in the form of a subscription, the issuance of the remainder of which only could be stopped. As to the bonds now out, Judge Filkins thinks that they cannot be recalled—they are in the hands of third parties, who would be wronged by such action. He is opposed to any issuance of railroad bonds; thinks that the railroad company can give no sufficient guaranty that the bonds will not be called for, and considers that a process at law can dissolve the whole concern. He offered an amendment that the Committee of citizens take such steps as are necessary to prevent any

Jewett thinks that the company might release the county from the $100,000 in bonds yet to be issued, and so the county, being a stockholder already in the amount of $100,000, would be a

Jesse O. Goodwin thinks that it couldn't legally be done, and said that the best way to get out of the scrape is to have a majority of the stockholders—not directors—release the county in default of a completion of contract by the Haskin, being asked, said that such an ar-angement might be made.

Mesick thinks that neither stockholders nor directors could do anything of the kind, but that as the investment is a bad one, the best thing for the county to do is to dissolve the concern and sell it out for what it is worth. Paxton said the business was understood well enough, and that the gentlemen who had been making learned speeches on the subject be put on a Committee to attend to it. So the resolution was called for, read, and, not being liked, a new one was presented, as follows:

The "History of Mohammedan Rule in Spain from the Downfall of the Gothic Monarchy" has been made the subject of an elaborate work just published at Leyden by a distinguished Orientalist, M. R. Dozy, in four volumes. Being drawn almost entirely from Arabic originals, many of which are now consulted for the first time, the book has all the picturesqueness of an old chronicle, combined with the critical acumen of the modern school of historians. The present installment of the history reaches to the year 1110, or to the conquest of Andalusia by the Almoravides; and the obscure annals of the period, illustrated by the exploits of the Cid and other Christian champions, may now be read with certainty and enjoyment.

The author of the work on John Rogers, the Marian martyr, lately noticed, proves to be an American gentleman, Joseph Lemuel Chester, who claims to be descended from the illustrious and the genealogical connection. Though unsuccessful on this point Chester has a bargain; but they are not men fitted by mature and trained by service to granule with mature and tr of clearing up the genealogical connection.

Though unsuccessful on this point, Chester has made an excellent monograph, and his "Genealogical Account of the Family of Rogers and Biographical Sketches of some of his Principal Descendants," will have interest for many on commanding gening that greatly suspense to that the slightest pretense to that the greatly suspense to the slightest pretense to that the slightest pretense to the slightest pretense the slightest Biographical Sketches of some of his Principal Descendants," will have interest for many on this side the Atlantic.

Professor Vera of Milan, the eloquent expounder of Hegel's philosophy, has published a new work, "L'Hegelianisme et la Philosophie," to vindicate the claims of his favorite system against the onslaught lately made on it by the french schoolled by Cousin. He brings out the fact that Hegel was no less great as a mathematician than as a philosopher, and was the founder of the philosophy of the infinitesimal calculus and the author of a physical theory of the earth, which, accepting Newton's discoveries, deduces from them who on the sightest pretense to that commanding genius, that gigantic grasp of the understanding, that almost supernatural power of conception and combination, which belong to the first order of statesmanship—not one of them who can for a moment compare with those great leaders who carried the country through the storm of the Revolution, and afterwards, with such matchless wisdom, reared the Republic. But, saying nothing of natural genius, they have not even the inferior capacity which long experience gives. Very few of them have been in legislative life for more than one or two terms.
