Jereme Dutschke Biography

Jereme Dutschke is a tribal citizen enrolled in Lone Band of Miwok Indians. Jereme grew up in Lone California, in a traditional Miwok household. Through his grandmother Ramona Dutschke and His Great Grandmother Birdy Burris, he was immersed in an environment where Northern Sierra Miwok was spoken, and traditional arts were practiced. Jereme continues this legacy as a cultural practitioner. Jereme also carries on a tradition of cultural preservation through his work with the Lone Band of Miwok Indians Cultural Department and Lone Band of Miwok Indians Cultural Committee.

Jereme Dutschke Currently serves as Director of the Lone band of Miwok Indians Cultural Department. Additionally, Jereme serves as Chair of the Lone Band of Miwok Indians Cultural Committee. Jereme has 17 years of experience working in cultural heritage protection for local Miwok/Nisenan Tribes. Jereme has worked on multiple archeological sites, participating in testing and survey work, and monitored ground disturbing activities for human remains and cultural objects. Jereme has participated in many Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act (NAGPRA) implementation projects, including repatriations from UC Berkeley and UC Riverside, and multiple reburials. Jereme has worked collaboratively on intertribal consortium activities for cultural site protection and NAGPRA implementation with local Miwok and Nisenan Tribes including Shingle Springs Band of Miwok Indians, Wilton Rancheria, Buena Vista Rancheria, Jackson Rancheria, and United Auburn Indian Community. Jereme currently oversees three National Park Service NAGPRA Consultation Grants to work with California State Parks and UC Berkeley for the repatriation of tribal ancestors taken from Sacramento County. Jereme also oversees grant funded projects for Northern Sierra Miwok Language Preservation, Lone Band of Miwok Indians oral history documentation, and historical archival research. Jereme is currently directing efforts to establish a Tribal Historic Preservation Office program for Lone Band of Miwok Indians.

Jereme's work with agencies, institutions, and other local California Indian nations to repatriate Miwok and Nisenan ancestors is commendable. Miwok and Nisenan landscapes were among the most heavily impacted in California. Throughout the early 20th century, archaeological excavation teams from Sacramento Junior College desecrated hundreds of burial sites in the region, resulting in "collections" that were divvied up and transported to institutions throughout the state and nation. These impacts to tribal landscapes have continued non-stop as these burial and cultural sites have been further destroyed during all of the development activities associated with a major metropolitan area at the confluence of two rivers. As a result, Miwok and Nisenan Tribal Ancestors are currently held at institutions throughout the state including the CSU system. Although NAGPRA and CalNAGPRA have been law for decades, there has been little institutional progress to repatriate Miwok and Nisenan ancestors. Since the passage of AB 275, which has empowered California tribes by recognizing their expertise on these matters as paramount, Miwok and Nisenan Tribes have worked non-stop to resolve this situation. Jereme has been an integral part of local tribal efforts to bring resolution to this harmful situation and facilitate healing for the Tribal nations of the Sacramento region.
